MICHAEL

Profile

My strength lies in not fearing failure and learning from it. When I first attempted to enter Keio University's graduate program, I was met with rejection. However, this failure marked the beginning of my journey towards self-improvement. I sought advice from my seniors, reviewed my portfolio, and reconsidered my interview responses. Specifically, I worked on enhancing my communication skills, which were a weak point, and thoroughly prepared for potential questions. Through self-reflection and proactive efforts, I overcame my weaknesses and approached the next exam with confidence. As a result, I succeeded in my second attempt and was admitted to Keio University. This experience taught me the importance of learning from failure and turning it into an opportunity for improvement.
